Classroom in the Wild is a spoken English initiative for kids from an underprivileged community - ongoing since 2014, funded by our tourism revenue

▲▲ The children have been learning how to cohabit the rural surroundings with elephants

For these children, a lack of access to learning English has stifled their progress, and for many of them joining their parents to work the land will be their only viable option. We meet them at their school - a hut accessed by a single road through rice paddy fields, around four miles from the world heritage site of Sigiriya. It is a wild, inaccessible area that takes up to four buses and a tuk-tuk ride to reach, which has resulted in some teachers refusing to come.
