

1: Return to Yourself : How to Retreat

A comfortable way to spend adult time.

We will introduce the Sekitei style. "Sekitei is an inn that aims for harmony beyond style."

The building incorporates many elements of Japanese architecture, but most of the furniture is from Scandinavia.

Drinks include not only local cold sake, but also carefully selected wines and spumantes. The music is mostly classical and jazz, but you can also hear the sound of a bamboo flute.

There is a wide variety of books from all over the world, past and present. The selections made by the owner, Ueno, seem disjointed and disorganized, but that is not the case at all. Rather, they are in comfortable harmony.

The modern era is not one in which everything is in the same style. It is not simply about disliking the sameness, but about appreciating and recognizing truly good things that are not bound by genre.

Even in clothes, it seems more fashionable to combine your favorite things well rather than wearing a neat set. A wooden home and ventilation plan suited to the climate and natural environment of the Seto Inland Sea, natural materials that are gentle on the body and change over time, a garden that allows you to feel the change of seasons, and the importance of furniture that comes into direct contact with the body.

While valuing these foundations, the hotel is promoting the idea of a modern inn with the flexibility to incorporate good things.
